Mark Lowe

Mark Lowe is a full-time professional genealogist, author and teacher who researches primarily in original records and manuscripts throughout the South. His experience as a classroom teacher, principal, and professional researcher provides a different perspective for each research problem. He is an instructor for the IGHR (Institute for Genealogical and Historical Research, Samford University), SLIG (Service Learning Interest Group, University of Georgia), and RIGSA (Regional In-depth Genealogical Studies Alliance). As director of RIGSA, he has developed and directed week-long interactive learning sessions and hands-on research focusing on original documents and manuscripts at regional archives.

Mark will both inform and entertain you with his unique humor and southern style as he presents his lectures.
